Col. Archer Anderson Delivers Eloquent Address at Tablet Unveiling.

MARK TREDEGAR WORKS

Confederate Memorial Society Erects Tablet on Historic Ground.

A clear November day filled with brilliant sunshine and a throng of deeply moved spectators, rendered the ceremonies attendant upon the unveiling of a tablet at the Tredegar Iron Works yesterday morning at 11 o'clock, in the presence of representatives of the Tredegar Iron Works, the Confederate Memorial Literary Society, Lee Camp and Sons of Veterans, most impressive and interesting.

On arrival at the works visitors were met and welcomed by Colonel Archer Anderson, F. T. Glasgow, J. T. Anderson, Archer Anderson, Jr., J. R. J. Anderson, St. M. M. Anderson, G. B. Hobson, Charles Bruce, William R. Trahanam, N. W. Cooper, F. A. Hobson, M. de G. Hobson and many other members of the company.

Souvenirs in the shape of little horseshoes made from the iron of the Merrimac-Virginia, were distributed, and, almost immediately after the entire assembling of those asked to be present, an adjournment to the yard was made. The tablet had been placed on the north end of the main office building, and the Rev. Robert Forsyth, of Saint Paul's Church, fronting the audience, offered a fervent and beautiful supplication that ended with the Lord's Prayer.

Afterward Colonel Archer Anderson delivered the following eloquent address, which was listened to with the closest attention:

"The tablet which we are about to unveil has been placed at the request of the ladies of the Confederate Memorial Literary Society in order to record briefly the chief service rendered during the war to the Confederate States by the Tredegar Iron Works.

"These works were founded in 1832. In less than two years afterwards the different parts of the establishment held by several owners became the property of the Tredegar Iron Company, organized in January, 1833. About seven years ago the old building, standing on the site of that to which this tablet is affixed, was pulled down, and in the garret, which had not been visited for fifty years, perhaps, was found a book containing the proceedings of the board of directors and of the stockholders of that company.

Leaders of Old Richmond.

"Many of those recorded as taking part in these meetings were the leading men of old Richmond—Francis B. Deane, Jr., the founder of the works, a man of the most ardent public spirit; Thomas Rutherford, Nicholas Mills, Samuel Marx, William H. Macfarland, Dr. Thomas Nelson, Samuel Moreland, George Woodbridge, Edward Cunningham, Jr., John R. Triplett, Bernard Peyton and others. But the enterprise was new, it encountered many difficulties and a partial reorganization in March, 1841, it called into its service as commercial agent Joseph R. Anderson, of Beaufort county, a young man of twenty-two years, who, after serving a short time in the Engineer Corps of the United States army, had accepted an appointment to the Chief Engineer of Virginia, Colonel Crozet, and in that capacity had constructed the turnpike from Staunton to Winchester. Afterwards so famous in the campaign of Stonewall Jackson. Two years and a half later he became the sole owner of the works, and in 1847 the sole owner.

"The old Tredegar Iron Company was soon afterwards dissolved, and its assets were distributed among its shareholders.

The Test of the Guns.

"At an early period of his connection with the business my father had undertaken the manufacture of heavy cast-iron guns for the army and navy using for this purpose the charcoal pig iron made at the Cloverfield and Grace furnaces in Beaufort county, Va. In this he was eminently successful, and the Tredegar Works became one of the four foundries employed by the United States government to make heavy cannon. Army and navy officers were always sent to supervise their manufacture and to prove each gun firing a number of rounds. I remember seeing such a trial take place in what is now Hollywood Cemetery, the shot being fired into the hill on which the superintendent's house at present stands. On one occasion, not long before the war, one of the departments determined to test a gun made at each of the government foundries to extremity by firing it with a certain charge till the gun burst. The gun made at the Tredegar Works stood the test to the greatest number of rounds than that of any other foundry, and the records at Washington no doubt attest this fact.

"Such was the preparation of these works for the service they had to render on the outbreak of the War Between the States.

The Cannon That Were Cast.
"There was, I believe, no other foundry in operation in the South, which had cast so heavy a gun, and though great efforts were made in the subsequent years of the war, with some success to establish other gun foundries, I do not understand that their product was very considerable. An old foundry record kept here shows that we cast in 1862 and 1863 (1860) cannon were cast at the Tredegar Iron Works during the years 1861-1865. Many of these were field guns of bronze or iron. It was no easy matter in those times to turn out this product here. One constant difficulty was to get efficient labor when the skilled men of the South were so few. There were but few independent manufacturers who could supply the various commodities needed.

"The ore had to be mined, the trees felled and converted into charcoal, the pig iron smelted in primitive blast furnaces with a capacity of less than 1,000 tons of annual production. The product had then to be transported in wagons or bateaux to the canal at Buchanan and thence in boats drawn by horses to the Tredegar Works. The product, and every one of these operations had to be conducted by the firm mentioned. Meanwhile coal had to be provided by the Tredegar Works. The ten-inch cannon delivered here to the Confederate government had at every stage of its manufacture, from the iron ore dug from the mountain side to the finished product of the firm of R. Anderson & Co., operating the Tredegar Works. Besides its head, some of its important members during the war were John F. and William F. Tanner and Robert and R. S. Archer.

Skill as Master Workmen.
"But at every point they were seconded by the skill and industry of the master workmen trained by long service here, who had become the practical managers of the different departments. I have only time to mention one, taken from us by a comparatively early death many years ago, our master foundryman, Peter S. Derbyshire, who had a real genius for his technical business, and, besides that, nerve and presence of mind at the critical moment of great need, which stamped him as a leader of men.

"Derbyshire was responsible for every gun cast in those eventful years.

"In the brief inscription on the tablet it was necessary to omit many of the products of these works, which were of almost vital interest to the Southern States, cut off from the rest of the world, though it is there recorded that the wrought iron armor of the frigate Merrimac-Virginia was made here.

"Gun carriages for field and siege artillery, bar iron for the blacksmith and the farmer, nails for the carpenter, spikes, bridge bolts, axles and car wheels for the railroad, supplied some of the urgent wants of the country. It was indispensable that the shops for constructing locomotives established here in 1852 were burnt a few years later and never rebuilt. General Anderson's associates in that enterprise, a practical locomotive builder, John Souther, of Boston, Mass., was still living last summer at the age of ninety-six.

"But it is time to conclude this heavy sketch. Enough has been said, perhaps, to give some idea of the supreme importance to the South in its poverty of the manufacturing industry of Richmond, and to show why it was necessary to try to hold this city long after mere military considerations would have dictated its evacuation.

"The Confederacy fell with Richmond. The tablet, when unveiled, was seen to be of granite almost square in shape and bearing the following inscription:

The Tredegar Iron Works, Founded 1833, Made for the Confederate Government 1861-1865, The greater part of cannon and projectiles Produced in the Southern States, And the wrought iron armor of the frigate Merrimac-Virginia.

This tablet is placed at the request of The Confederate Memorial Literary Society, A. D. 1910.

Edgar R. Archer, of the Tredegar Iron Works, drew the veil, his act being greeted with a repetition of the applause that marked the conclusion of Colonel Anderson's address. Both brought home afresh the importance of the work now being done in the marking of buildings famous through their connection with the War of the Confederacy.

Among those present were Mrs. Joseph R. Anderson, Mrs. Archer Anderson, Mrs. Lizzie Cary Daniel, acting president of the Confederate Memorial Literary Society; Mrs. James D. W. chairman of the society's sites committee; Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. J. Taylor Ellyson, the Rev. James P. Smith, D. D., Mayor and Mrs. D. C. Richardson, Mrs. William A. Anderson, Mrs. J. B. Pace, Misses Sally and Kathleen Anderson, Mrs. F. D. Williams, Miss Ellen Glasgow, Miss Roberta Wellford, Mrs. W. N. Hamlet, Mrs. A. M. Tyler, Miss Amy McRae Werth, Miss Helen McIntyre, Mrs. H. T. Ellyson, Mrs. P. J. White, Miss Maude Woodfin and others.

A. AND M. STUDENTS FORM A DEMOCRATIC CLUB

Robeson Students Entertained at Meredith College—Other College News Notes.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 7.—During the past week a students' Democratic club, known as the "Ante-Marionettes" Club, was organized at A. & M. College, with the following officers: H. R. Cotes, chairman executive committee; George R. Ross, secretary; S. J. Kirby, treasurer; R. W. Graeber, S. J. Kirby, R. L. Morrison, George R. Ross and H. R. Cotes, executive committee.

The students of the college were very much disappointed that the game of football scheduled to be played with Washington and Lee in Lynchburg Saturday was cancelled by the management of the football team of the latter institution, over the protest of the student body of Washington and Lee, as the game would have afforded an opportunity to judge of the relative strength of A. & M. and V. P. I., who meet in a great gridiron struggle in Norfolk at their annual game on Thanksgiving, as Saturday a week ago V. P. I. defeated Washington and Lee in Roanoke by a score of 23 to 0.

A. & M.'s football record, so far this season, is very good. Georgetown having been tied 0 to 0, and Villanova, one of the strongest teams that ever played in this State, being tied, 6 to 6. Eastern College was defeated 22 to 0 a week ago.
